b. What ICANN-related issues currently are of interest to your Organization's constituents/membership:

Privacy

Discussion of privacy laws and the transfer of personal data always accompany WHOIS discussions. Some policy discussions center on changing the WHOIS policy to restrict the amount of information available through the display of a WHOIS record. Many European nations, for example, have strict controls about how personal data moves across national borders. Registrars sponsoring a domain name might be in a different country from the registrant and from the registry that enters it into the zone file. WHOIS inquiries come from many different countries. Data flows globally. Laws change over time, and it may be difficult to identify how privacy laws apply to the flow of information and data across borders.
